

Honoring the Arrival of India's Land

There is a river in India that is a life-giving watercourse where nature is king.

It flows down from high in the mountains,
putting together a natural crown, a song.

The river meanders through fields and valleys,
bringing life and happiness and erasing all suffering.
During festival season, it provides a source of joy
as people assemble in a sublime tone.

As nature paints a picture of tranquil bowers,
the air is filled with the fragrance of flowers.
Santana's music makes a magical illustrate birds chirp sweetly along with the trees sway.

Our awe of the environment's majesty,
which is so adulterated and pure, will never fade.
Every movement we take on this land serves as a reminder of the guiding hand of nature.

Hence, let's treasure and guard this treasure so that future generations can enjoy this delight as well.
Let's respect the river, the celebrations, and the music.
And let wildlife flourish where it belongs, in the open.
